QUOTES FROM PAT & ROSEMARIE KEOUGH, IN THEIR BOOK
"THE NIAGARA ESCARPMENT"

....we befoul and destroy our own home, this beautiful planet, in a greed-fueled quest for growth and development at any cost.

Plants, animals, entire ecosystems, and native cultures are being wiped out at a bewildering rate.

"In southern Ontario, our forebears inadvertently destroyed much of the pristine environment. Today, although living in a so-called enlightened world and unable to feign ignorance, society wears blinkers, while continuing to follow resolutely in the footsteps of the past. Now only a few scattered remnants of this environment remain, particularly in the Niagara Escarpment- a long narrow ribbon where nature and humanity converge. It is steadily losing quality as it is nibbled away by unrelenting pressures from a sprawling urban population.

→ If the reasonable citizens of Ontario, and specifically of this community, cannot muster the will to hold the line against increasing degradation of the Escarpment, how can we expect developing countries to heed our words.
